Sighing, she stooped down to pick up her bucket of dirty water. walking cautiously down the steep stairs, she entered the hot kitchen, heated by the warmth of the stove. Dumping the old water out, so she could keep washing. Hearing the doorbell ring, she climbed the stairs to the main floor again, grateful for the excuse to take a break. When she got to the front door, where her older stepsisters and Grandmother were waiting for her. "Go on, open it!" Her Grandmother snapped. Giving her Grandmother a heated glare, she stepped forward and tugged open the heavy door anyway. A tall man dressed extremely well. "Hello" he said primly. "I have a message for you.
